Dust Control: It's Time to Clear the Air. Dust. It can limit visibility, muddy standing water and cover everything in site. That's more than annoying, it can be a threat to public health and federal transportation funds for our community.

Small dust particles called PM 10 – particulate matter measuring 10 micrometers or less in diameter – can be inhaled and lodge in lungs. It's a dangerous situation for those with asthma and other respiratory conditions and a threat to all of us.

That's why the federal government has set air quality standards. Failure to meet those standards means $7 billion in transportation funds for Maricopa County could be lost.

In an effort to meet the federal standards, the city of Glendale is working with other local and state government agencies to prevent dust violations. As a Glendale business or resident, you can help by taking the following steps:

- Maintain your landscape and cover loose dirt with vegetation or gravel.
- Sign-up to receive alerts telling you when the air quality monitors show dust pollution levels rising and find out what actions you should take on those days. The information is available at www.maricopa.gov/eq/news/RapidResponseNotification.aspx.
- Do not use leaf blowers or perform other activities that may create dust on high wind days. Plan your work activities by viewing a five-day air quality forecast at www.azdeq.gov/environ/air/ozone/mcdust.pdf.
- Report any activity you see that is stirring up dust. Enforcement officers can take the opportunity to help educate others on the importance of dust control. To learn more about reporting dust issues, go to <http://www.glendaleaz.com/codecompliance/dustordinance.cfm> or call Code Compliance at 623-930-3610.

Glendale's Historic Beet Sugar Factory Prepares for Transformation. One of the city of Glendale's oldest downtown buildings, the Beet Sugar Factory, is undergoing a restoration to reopen its doors in the heart of Glendale's Centerline District. The current owner of the 105-year-old landmark at 52nd Avenue and Lamar plans to open a business and preserve the original red-brick historic features of the five story, 95-foot-tall structure.

The owner of this iconic factory, Ray Klemp, will assist in relocating Forward Brands from Phoenix to Glendale to create a production and distribution facility for premium quality spirits. Forward Brands is owned by Klemp's daughters, Lauren and Morgan. The improvements to the building are expected to take place in phases over the next several months and include re-purposing a small house south of the sugar beet factory that will eventually become a tasting venue and special event location.

The Beet Sugar Factory opened in 1906, six years before Arizona became an official state. Since then, numerous businesses called it home, each producing a variety of products including sugar, beer, Squirt soda and soy sauce. A massive smokestack was removed in 1951 after being struck by lightning. While the history books call it the "Beet Sugar Factory," local residents have also referred to it over the years as "sugar beet" instead. At one time the sugar beet was grown in Glendale and was the primary image of the city's official seal. To this day, the old factory is a recognizable icon for historic downtown Glendale and a point of pride for the community.

Construction for the first phase of restoring the building is expected to begin within the next 60 days. Read more about Glendale's Centerline District.
