GLENDALE 11 DEBUTS NEW SHOW HIGHLIGHTING CITY'S HISTORIC BUILDINGS

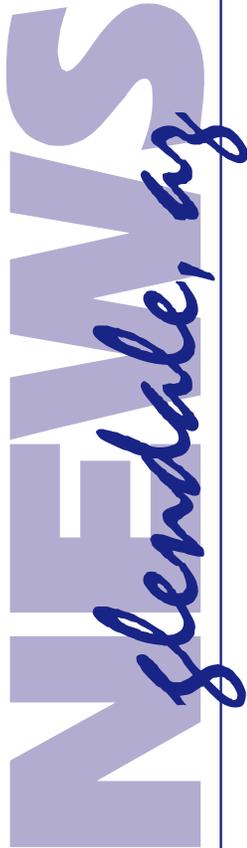

GLENDALE, Ariz. – If you are a history buff, grab the popcorn and the remote and settle in for an entertaining night of television on Sunday, May 11 at 7 p.m., as Glendale 11 debuts “Glendale’s Historic Hidden Treasures,” a brand new 30-minute program that weaves a fascinating tapestry of Glendale’s historic buildings and arts and culture.

Viewers will step back in time and explore myriad properties located within just a few miles of Glendale's historic downtown. Many of the storytellers interviewed for the television show are lifelong Glendale residents who have decades of connections to the buildings and properties.

“This new program is a great source of pride as we showcase Glendale’s past and the importance of our preservation efforts,” said Glendale’s Tourism Manager Lorraine Pino. “Glendale residents may not be aware of all of the cultural amenities that exist in their own back yard, so this program hopefully will generate more interest in the city’s history for both residents and visitors alike.”

The historic properties featured include: First National Bank (now known as the Coffinger Law office); First United Methodist Church; the Glendale Woman's Club; Virginia's House; the Glendale Grammar School; the Beet Sugar Factory; the Humphrey and Davidson buildings; the Glendale High School Auditorium; the Flora Croft neighborhood; and the Morcomb entryway.
